

Community leaders celebrated at 'COTY' reception

By Shawn Loughlin
The Citizen

Last Thursday, North Huron Publishing hosted its first Citizen of the Year Awards night since 2019, awarding winners from the past four years at Trinity Anglican Church in Blyth.

It was a full house, with several dozen in attendance, including nominators, past Citizen of the Year Award winners and several members of the community. Citizen Publisher Deb Sholdice, Editor Shawn Loughlin and Reporter Scott Stephenson conducted the ceremony.

First, Annie Sparling was honoured as the 2020 Citizen of the Year Award winner for the Blyth community. She won the award thanks to her extensive involvement with the Blyth Community Betterment Group and persistence in resurrecting both a Blyth Santa Claus parade and the popular Rutabaga Fest.

Sparling was unable to attend and sent her regrets and thanks.

Bob Kellington was then honoured for posthumously winning the 2020 Citizen of the Year Award for Brussels.

Kellington passed away in 2020, but had dedicated much of his life to volunteerism. He was heavily involved with the Brussels Lions Club and organized fundraisers for his local church and the Canadian Foodgrains Bank, a cause for which he was especially passionate.

Marguerite Thomas, Kellington's widow was unable to attend, but shared a message of hope for other widows and widowers, suggesting that friends and family check on survivors for weeks, months and years after their spouses pass away. "We didn't die when our spouses did," she said.

The 2021 winner of the Blyth

Citizen of the Year Award was also awarded posthumously - David Cartwright, who had decades of volunteerism with the First Blyth Scouts and Trinity Anglican Church, the very building in which the celebration was taking place.

David's wife Shari and daughter Brittany were both on hand to help celebrate David's legacy.

The 2021 Brussels Citizen of the Year Award winner, Zoellyn Onn, was in attendance and thanked everyone for nominating her and recognizing her efforts in the community.

Onn won the award thanks to her extensive involvement in Brussels as a member of the Brussels Horticultural Society, Brussels Agricultural Society and Brussels Lions Club, serving as president of the latter two organizations. She is also the founder of the Brussels Fairy Door Trail and had been instrumental in bringing a number of initiatives to fruition, such as the return of the Brussels Farmers' Market, the community choral group Sing Sing and more.

In her capacity as a Lions Club member, she also served as a mentor and leader for the Brussels Leo Club, which has accomplished much within the village since being revived just over a decade ago.

The 2022 Blyth Citizen of the Year winner was Lissa Kolkman, who won due to her work with the Friends of the Village of Blyth group, serving as one of its most prominent members and as its liaison to North Huron Council.

She and her fellow volunteers have worked to beautify the village and maintain its public gardens for many years, in addition to hosting the Christmas wreath competition and Easter Egg hunt on the Greenway Trail.

She has also volunteered with the Blyth Festival and Blyth

United Church over the years.

Kolkman was in attendance as well and simply thanked those who nominated her and supported her win, saying she was honoured to be listed among such notable volunteers and community members.

The 2022 Brussels Citizen of the Year winner was Margaret McInroy thanks to her work with the Walton Women's Institute and the Melville Presbyterian Church, including its bestselling anniversary cookbook, in addition to working with Soup and More 2 and other fundraisers throughout the Brussels and Walton communities.

McInroy took the opportunity to address those in attendance, thanking her nominators and those who selected her as the winner.

She said her spirit of volunteerism can be chalked up to the encouragement of two men - one was her father Wilfred Shortreed and the other is her husband Rick. As a child, Margaret said she was encouraged to be part of a team and to take that commitment seriously. And when she was encouraged to volunteer, she was also pushed to go the extra mile and be a member of the executive, which she still practises to this day.

The 2022 (and first-ever) winner of the Huron County Citizen of the Year Award, Karen Webster of the Wingham area, was also in attendance that night.

Webster was honoured for her work with the Blyth Repository of History, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in Wingham and the Meals on Wheels program, among others.

She has gone on missionary trips and created pre-cut personal protective equipment kits for the Wingham and District Hospital in the early days of the COVID-19 pandemic when personal protective equipment was at a premium.

She thanked everyone for the honour and said it was humbling to be recognized among so many other inspiring volunteers.

To end the evening, the 2023 winners received their plaques and were honoured.

Joe Gahan and Megan Lee-Gahan were recognized for their invaluable work in founding the Blyth Kids Club, which is always expanding to include new programming and offerings, such as soccer, hockey, arts and crafts, disco nights and summer parties.

Joe acknowledged the gracious support of the community saying that, thanks to extensive donations, the club is now free to all, while Megan thanked all of the club's volunteers and patrons who have made it such a force within the village.

The 2023 Brussels winner, Roxane Nicholson, was honoured for her work with the Brussels, Morris and Grey Community Centre's Inspiring our Future campaign, raising money for the renovation and expansion of the centre.

The campaign's fundraising goal was increased several times as costs rose and it still exceeded that final

$2 million number by more than $500,000. She has also been extensively involved with the North Huron Community Food Share over the years.

Nicholson thanked the entire campaign and all of its volunteers for the work involved, as well as her family members, who she said are often roped into helping with her endeavours through being "volun-told" to do things.

She also thanked The Citizen, saying that without a powerful local newspaper, local projects, achievements and activities would not be heralded throughout the community as they are.

The final winner of the night was Wayne Clausius from the Grand Bend area.

Clausius began his career as a volunteer in 2009, putting his name forward to help with The Salvation Army in Goderich and his role in the community only stood to grow from there.

For over a dozen years, Clausius worked with the Community Volunteer Income Tax Program. In its first year, just over a dozen people applied, compared to what is now hundreds of people. The program has since retrieved millions of dollars for low-income people and families, putting money back in the pockets of those who need it most.

Clausius is currently a resident of Jessica's House hospice in Exeter and was presented his award by Sholdice and Loughlin on Sunday, Nov. 19 at a small event that included Clausius's children, other family members and some of his fellow volunteers.

In an e-mail to The Citizen, Clausius said he accepted the award on behalf of the more-than 20 volunteers who have helped him administer the program over the years.

Nominations for the 2024 Citizen of the Year Awards will open within the first few months of the new year. Consider nominating someone whose work in the community within that year has improved life for those around them.

Nomination forms will be published in The Citizen on a regular basis or nominations can be e-mailed directly to Loughlin at editor@northhuron.on.ca.

Brucefield’s Hendriks adapted after ’22 storm

A new way of thinking

A bright and airy atmosphere has been a positive development at Hendriks Dairies Ltd. near Brucefield.

The Rural Voice

After digging out the calf hutches during the great Christmas snowstorm of 2022 and worrying about the health of his calves, Tyler Hendriks decided to adapt a section of a new storage shed into a calf barn for his Jersey calves.

The new build created machinery and commodity storage, as well as a reserved space for an open calf barn, complete with turkey curtains and a special, draft-proof entrance. With pens for 39 calves and room for 50 underneath two air tubes, the calves live inside Agri-Plastic Flex-Pens that are eight feet in length. Designed to European animal welfare standards, the pens have windows built in the partitions to allow calves to see each other. Each partition can be removed to create group housing, a requirement that may come into place once the updated Dairy Code of Practice is released later this year. Hendriks prefers having calves in individual pens to prevent cross-sucking but is open to pairing calves if required under the new code.

Calves at Hendriks Dairies Ltd. near Brucefield are born in large birthing pens in the main barn, where cows are kept on a bedding pack thick with straw. Newborn calves are weighed and transferred to the new calf barn, where they are tube-fed colostrum for their first and second feeding. They are also given a First Defence bolus to increase their immunity and Inforce nasal vaccine as a safeguard against respiratory illness.

At two weeks of age, the calves’ milk volume is increased to six litres. “We have been feeding whole milk the past four years and that’s largely because there isn’t any milk replacer on the market that is formulated for Jersey specifications,” said Hendriks, owner/operator of the farm. His wife, Emily, and parents Henry and Patti Hendriks have shares in the farm and also help in this multi-generational operation.

Depending on birth date and weight, calves are weaned around 60

During winter and spring, newborn calves wear “coats” to keep them warm. Tyler explains that Jerseys are the smallest of the dairy breeds and the calves are born ranging from 50 to 60 pounds, with most in the 60-pound range. They have very little fat and size to keep them warm and good calf management is key to help them thrive. In contrast, calves born from Jersey cows bred to Angus beef bulls (the Hendriks breed cattle in the bottom of the genetic pool to beef) weigh between 90 and 120 pounds.

Calves will stay in this new, bright, spacious, calf barn for three months before moving to another barn on site. At seven months of age, they move again to a CoverAll pack barn across the road at Tyler’s parents’ place. Henry takes over from there, implementing a heifer feeding and breeding strategy. The heifers return to the main dairy barn five months before calving.

Hendriks is not a believer in having all the animals under “one roof” because each stage of the cow’s life calls for different ventilation requirements. However, he would prefer all the animals were on one site, so he didn’t have to travel down the road with a tractor and Total Mixed Ration mixer for feeding or a skid steer to clean pens.

Hendriks is keeping many of the existing calf hutches he used to raise the Jersey/Angus cross calves. Others were sold to friends and neighbours.

As the primary calf care person on the farm, Hendriks is enjoying the new facility. Because it is a distance from the main barn, he uses a side-by-side to bring milk from the main barn to the calves. The calves are bedded with straw stored in the commodity shed beside the multi-purpose calf barn.

Clean, cool and fresh, the barn will definitely keep the snow off the calves and is less labour-intensive than the outdoor calf hutches. Hendriks says he loves analytics and achieving production goals so beginning with healthy calves is the first step towards meeting his dairy production goals.

38th Annual Citizen of the Year Award Nominations Open

There are so many people out there who do so much to improve their community. This is your opportunity to show your appreciation for all they do.

Each year a committee chooses an outstanding citizen from each of the Blyth and area and Brussels and area communities and wider Huron County area to receive an award for contribution to the community. If you know someone you think should be honoured, please fill in the form and send it in. You may attach a longer explanation of why you think your nominee should win, if you like. If you have nominated someone before and they didn't win, we encourage you to submit again. Emailed submissions can be sent to Shawn Loughlin at editor@northhuron.on.ca
