MP-elect Monsef makes history

A campaign volunteer, a political activist and a professor weigh in on win by Peterborough's first female MP

BY SARAH FRANK

After the Conservative's 12-year run in Peterborough, the riding's newest MP will head to Ottawa wearing red party stripes.

How did MP-elect Maryam Monsef manage to take back the reins after more than a decade? Campaign affiliates and Peterborough political junkies are offering up different perspectives on the election win, saying the riding's bellwether history, a national push for change and strategic voting all worked in Ms Monsef's favour.

A group of political activists also say they've been working to determine the best way to boot the Conservatives from Peterborough since 2012.

All agree MP Monsef has a genuine personality that resonated with the nearly 30,000 people who cast a ballot in her favour.

Trent University history professor David Sheinin says a 30-year-old woman from Afghanistan may not have had as good of a chance at the polls 10 years ago, so Ms Monsef's election is reflection of a change in Peterborough.

He says there were a couple of main factors at play in the election, the first being a strong national message. Former Prime Minister Stephen Harper severely underestimated how badly off many Canadians feel they are, he says.

Public safety minister pushes for police board investigation

BY JAMIE STEEL

The Minister of Community Safety and Correctional Services has asked the Ontario Civilian Police Commission to investigate the Peterborough Police Services Board.

Bob Hall, Chair of the Peterborough Police Services Board, said he had not yet been contacted by the Ministry or the Commission as of 4:45 p.m. Tuesday.

"At this time I can't really comment. It's business as usual," says Mr. Hall.

"I'm just going to have to wait and see when I'm contacted."

In a statement released Tuesday (March 8), Minister Yasir Naqvi, whose ministry has been monitoring the board for the last few years, said he referred the matter to the OCPC for investigation.

"In order to ensure that the Peterborough Police Services has effective governance I have been closely monitoring the situation with the Peterborough Police Services Board (PPSB) over the last couple of years," he says in a written statement.

"This has included having the Ministry of Community Safety and Correctional Services' Police Service Advisors provide support and advice to the PPSB and the Peterborough Police Service (PPS), as per our mandate under the Police Services Act.

"This support was increased during the period of the de-amalgamation and during the establishment of the new service and board, and we will continue to provide that ongoing support," reads the release, in part.

'We love the game and that's why we do this'

He credits the Peterborough Power Youth Basketball Association for making the sport an affordable option for parents. The PYBA runs a house league and rep program for boys and girls and currently has 400 players registered with 18 rep teams competing.

Young was a member of the Power and remembers those days fondly, for him, basketball is life and is what he knows best.

The same can be said for Self and Evans with the game of lacrosse.

Athletes who have paid their dues in their respected sports now see the business potential for specialized camps where they can share their passion for the game and support their families by doing it.

It's a full-time commitment at Nationwide Lacrosse as the co-owners do everything from accounting to recruiting and organizing practice plans, to booking school visits.

"We love the game of lacrosse and that's why we do this," he says. "The biggest thing is just seeing the kids play the game and having fun."

Young says he has space for six more campers while there is limited space available for the lacrosse camp here in Peterborough.
